BUREAU AGENT

You are a Special Agent for the Bureau of Investigation. Your current assignment in this godforsaken hell hole is keeping an eye out for any illegal activity conducted along the popular east coast shipping routes. So far, there's not been much to report, with the exception of one unmarked vessel spotted passing Rockport during a storm in early February, which seems to have vanished without a trace.

A fellow undercover agent and friend, Warren Thomas, has been stationed up on Beacon Island under the name Michael Turner. What better place to keep an eye on passing ships than from a lighthouse? He got a message to you that he'd uncovered some sort of evidence of smuggling, but he didn't go into any details. He also asked you to meet him in Rockport tomorrow morning, so here you are, on a late boat heading for your rendezvous.

You really hope he's found something that would signal an end to your time here. This whole region gives you the creeps. Maybe it's just your imagination; maybe you've just been involved in too many weird cases in the past. Ah, it's probably nothing. But if it is, why do you always get the feeling you're being watched whenever you're on the water?

Roleplaying hooks:

- Get that report from your undercover colleague, in the hope it's enough to get you reassigned somewhere less creepy.
