A spider map template for character analysis. The central circle is labeled "Me". Six branches radiate from the center, each ending in a rectangular box. Each box is divided into two sections: the top section is labeled "Char." and the bottom section is labeled "Player".

You are more than just charming with good looks. Thanks to your love of the water, you were drawn to marine research - marine biology in particular. Right now, you're finishing a research paper on Rockport's marine environment through Boston University. A few more weeks, and you should be ready to submit. One more visit to Rockport ought to do it, which is why you're on the boat tonight, so you'll be there ready for an early start in the morning.

With your education and experience on the water, you'll be a shoe-in for a position at a marine research station somewhere - the world is, metaphorically speaking at least, your oyster. Your biggest hope is to one day discover a new species of marine life and name it yourself. You've even seen some evidence there may be unusual marine life around Rockport, but not enough to publish. Maybe this trip will help change that.

Roleplaying hooks:

- To get that research paper finished, and perhaps find evidence of a new marine species - one you can name after yourself. That'll show 'em!
